Cornell MILR/MBA

What can the MILR/MBA do for me?

In today's rapidly changing workplace, the dual MILR/MBA degree can give you a significant advantage: by putting your career in human resources on the fast track, for one. Or, if you're aspiring to high levels of human resource management, your leadership skills and organization-wide view of how human resource strategy interfaces with business strategy will give you a respected voice in top decision making. If you're interested in consulting, your comprehensive knowledge of business, specialized human-resource management, and labor relations will give you a decided edge.

Why Cornell? Johnson and Cornell's School of Industrial and Labor Relations are among the nation's most respected schools in their fields, and the dual degree puts the prestige of both behind your name. During your course of study, you'll find yourself working closely with exceptionally talented peers and world-class faculty in an intensely supportive and collaborative culture. And, during your time at Cornell as well as after you graduate, you'll discover you've joined one of the most far-reaching, influential, and engaged communities in the world: the Cornell alumni network.

Two powerful degrees in two and a half years. Apply to both the ILR School's MILR and Johnson's Two-Year MBA programs at the same time, or apply during your first year at either program. You'll complete two semesters at ILR and three semesters at Johnson. There is some flexibility for customization within the dual-degree program structure.

| Timing | OPTION 1 Start at Johnson | OPTION 2 Start at ILR |
